Inhaltsangabe	The course provides an introduction to play, understood both as a human universal and as an expression of creativity and cultural diversity. It is grounded in an approach that prioritizes anthropological, pedagogical, and semiotic perspectives, while also seeking to foster broader interdisciplinary dialogue. By examining, for instance, the close relationship between the pedagogy of play, active learning, and participation, the course extends its scope from childhood to adulthood. Particular emphasis is placed on the ludic dimension, its spatial metaphors (such as play space, play frame, the magic circle, the playful city, etc.), and the use of playful methodologies within participatory design processes.

Themen der Lehrveranstaltung	Topics covered include: - An introduction to play studies - Core concepts in the pedagogy of play and active learning - An introduction to capacity building and participatory design
Stichwörter	Play-based Education, Play Space, Playfulness, Playful Participatory Processes
Empfohlene Voraussetzungen
Propädeutische Lehrveranstaltungen
Unterrichtsform	The course features an introductory theoretical component, alternated with reflective moments focused on participants' own play biographies and on any professional experiences related to play and the ludic dimension. The programme combines in-person activities (Winter, Summer, and Autumn Schools) with online sessions. Priority will be given to the co-construction of a shared learning process, as well as to the development of in-depth explorations shaped by students' interests, as they emerge during the Schools and through individual meetings with the instructor. Expected learning outcomes: - Critically interpreting spaces through the lens of play, active learning, and participation. - Integrating play, the pedagogy of play, and participation into the playful creation of educational environments. - Applying playful strategies in participatory playful processes.
