Inhaltsangabe	This course provides a research-based and practice-oriented foundation in entrepreneurship. Students explore key theories, frameworks, and current debates in the field, with a focus on opportunity recognition, entrepreneurial decision-making, and venture creation. Hands-on activities foster critical reflection and the ability to apply concepts in diverse contexts. The course aims to deepen students' understanding of entrepreneurial dynamics and prepare them for real-world entrepreneurial challenges.

Themen der Lehrveranstaltung	The course provides a comprehensive, research-based and practice-oriented introduction to entrepreneurship. It develops students' understanding of the entrepreneurial process, from recognizing opportunities to creating and shaping viable business models. Students explore how ideas are tested, evaluated, and refined in iterative processes. While the course emphasizes new venture creation, it also broadens the perspective by highlighting the relevance of entrepreneurial thinking within existing organizations, whether in early growth phases or during later strategic renewal. The course fosters the development of key competencies such as entrepreneurial decision-making, resourcefulness in constrained settings, and the ability to navigate uncertainty. By engaging with academic literature, case studies, and hands-on activities, students cultivate a mindset that enables them to act entrepreneurially and respond effectively to complex challenges. Ultimately, the course prepares students to identify and seize opportunities in an everchanging environment.
