Contents Summary	In this course, we examine the special features of professional team sports leagues, the labour markets in professional sports, and the organisation of major sporting events from an economic perspective. In addition, we examine the market for amateur and recreational sports from a health economics perspective and explore the political significance of both competitive and recreational sports. This enables us to formulate recommendations for action not only for event organisers, but also for politicians, professional athletes and amateur athletes.
Course Topics	The course introduces and discusses the institutional framework,

	theoretical models and empirical findings of the sports industry. A particular focus is placed on applying economic concepts to the sports industry and comparing the findings with results from other markets. The individual topics are: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Supply and demand in sport 2) Production 3) Market structures 4) Economics of sports teams 5) Monopoly and antitrust law 6) Strategic pricing 7) Major sporting events 8) Data and empirical analyses in sport
