Inhaltsangabe	In the second semester students develop projects in small teams with external partners from “the real world”, informed and strengthened by Design Research related to Project 2. The teacher works in close collaboration with the project leaders of Project 2. Design Research related to Project 2 explores research-driven artefacts as a means through which designers can more actively involve research participants in processes of eco-social transformation. With a strong focus on futuring techniques, in this course, students are encouraged to construct and generate novel research approaches based upon an interweaving of established research tools and methods and novel design and socially-driven actions. Teaching sessions will help students select relevant research approaches to gather information and knowledge regarding the context of their project while helping them frame a given context and develop research questions and design briefs that involve others through participation and co-creation.
