Inhaltsangabe	This course examines the principles and practices of leadership and human resource management (HRM) within the context of the tourism industry. Emphasis is placed on the strategic and operational challenges of managing people in a customer-oriented, seasonally variable, and culturally diverse environment. The course explores how effective leadership and HRM contribute to organizational performance, employee engagement, service quality, and sustainable development in tourism. Core topics include leadership theories and styles; recruitment, training, and talent development; motivation and performance management; organizational culture; diversity and inclusion; labor market dynamics in tourism; and the role of HRM in promoting innovation, resilience, and sustainability in tourism organizations. Through case studies and critical analysis, students will develop a contextual understanding of people management tailored to the specific demands of tourism enterprises.
